Curtis withdraws committee nominations

By MIKE DENNISON
Montana Kaimin Reporter

The names of 15 finalists for the University of Montana presidential search committee were released yesterday — just one hour after ASUM President David Curtis withdrew all of his nominees for three student positions on the committee.

Because of a dispute over who should name the five student members on the 18-member committee, Curtis withdrew his nominations.

Curtis is now demanding that he choose all five student members of the search committee. The committee will choose a successor to UM President Richard Bowers, who announced his resignation Nov. 3, effective June 30.

Earlier in the day, Curtis apparently had conceded that, by law, Commissioner of Higher Education John Richardson would choose all finalists for the search committee.

He then submitted the last three of nine nominations to the commissioner. The other six nominations were submitted last week.

Curtis said he then consulted with several people who convinced him he could legally win his argument that he, as ASUM president, should choose all five student members of the committee. This advice prompted him to withdraw all of his nominations, Curtis said.

Curtis declined to name with whom he had consulted.

As of last night, ASUM Legal Services personnel have been examining the University Teachers' Union collective bargaining agreement, Curtis said. He said at the earliest, an opinion will be released this morning.

At the end of the press release naming the 15 finalists, Richardson said: "The Associated Students of the University of Montana have not submitted a list of nominees to the commissioner for his consideration in appointing student members to the committee."

As it now stands, the search committee comprises five faculty members, three regents, two UM administrators, four members of the Missoula community, one non-academic staff member and five students. Two of those students will also fill one of the other categories, serving a "dual-role" purpose.

The 15 finalists named by Richardson yesterday are:

- UM faculty — Margery Brown, associate dean of the law school; Laurence Berger, professor of psychology and acting chairman

Anti-Duke petition heads for CB

By C. L. GILBERT
Montana Kaimin Reporter

If ASUM Programming has any say in the matter, David Duke will speak at the University of Montana. If any of the 500 people who signed a petition protesting his presence in Missoula have a say in the matter, he will not.

But the decision is not theirs to make. The decision will ultimately rest with Central Board.

Rick Ryan, director of ASUM Programming, said that he would not cancel the lecture and ASUM was "proceeding as if the lecture will happen."

Ryan said that even if the group opposed to Duke's lecture collected 2,000 validated student signatures, he would "go ahead with it."

This means that the group will have to take the issue to Central Board, which has authority over Programming, if any official action is to be taken.

Ryan said that the same situation existed a few years ago when ASUM signed a contract with John Dean, former legal counsel to President Nixon, to speak. Ryan said there was a great deal of protest from students, but Dean did come and his lecture was well-attended.

There are two possibilities that CB will face should it decide to stop Duke from appearing, according to Ryan. One is to cancel the contract and refuse to pay the agreed upon lecture fee. He said this would destroy ASUM's relationship with Yardley Speakers and Entertainment, the booking agent for the lecture.

The other option is to agree to pay Duke, but to ask him not to come to the university. Ryan said, "There are some people who think it is worth $1,400 to not have him come."

In an effort to raise student awareness on the issue, opponents to Duke held a rally yesterday in the University Center mall to "speak out about our anger and insult at his being brought here." They also used the occasion to commemorate the birthday of Martin Luther King Jr. King would have been 52 yesterday.

Duke, a former Grand Wizard of the Ku Klux Klan, is now the head of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, which is not considered as militant as the KKK.

But Terry Messman Rucker of the Student Action Center called Duke "the famous leopard that has changed his spots." Meyer Chessin, professor of botany, agreed, saying, although what Duke says now is "more palatable, his message and record are still racist."

Abdul Kadri, a UM student from Lebanon, related the present situation at UM to events in his home country. He said the civil war in Lebanon was caused "because we let people like Duke come among us. Duke is nothing but hate and violence, even if he doesn't say so."

Ulysses Doss, professor of Afro-American studies and a personal friend of Martin Luther King, took the opportunity to speak about human rights. "For Martin, human rights were more than a dream," he said. "Human rights were an idea to be lived from dawn to dusk. But for many, unfortunately, human rights remain dumbfoundingly unreal."

The petition opposing Duke's presence will be presented to CB at its regularly scheduled meeting next week.

Development bill calls for penalties

By BOOMER SLOTHOWER
Montana Kaimin Legislative Reporter

HELENA—A bill that would impose liability and criminal penalties upon persons who delay or interfere with industrial or commercial development in Montana without good cause may not make it through the Legislature. At the very least, should serve notice to environmental groups that the lawmakers of this session do not look kindly on attempts to delay economic growth.

Rep. Joe Kanduch, D-Anaconda, the bill's primary sponsor, said the reasons for the bill have "been brewing for several years." He said, "The scale has been unbalanced" against economic development.

The bill would impose penalties on any entity, be it individual, company, organization or governmental body, that "delays or interferes" with economic development without "good cause." The bill basically leaves it up to the courts to decide what "good cause" is.

Kanduch said that if the delayer can show good cause, then there is no problem. The people he wants to stop, he said, impede progress just because it is progress.

"Anyone can do what they want," he said. "I just think they should have to take responsibility for their actions. If a person has good cause, then fine. But if he's just doing it to harass us, then I want to see him stopped," he said.

The bill would make the delayer liable for costs due to delays, Kanduch said. This should make people or organizations think before initiating proceedings that delay development, he said.

"Anyone with a 15-cent stamp can stop construction by writing a letter asking for a study," he said. "Everything has to come to a standstill until someone makes a decision and that's not right."

The bill has 21 other sponsors and Kanduch said he hopes it will make it through the legislative process without major amendments.

Some of the co-signers, though, believe the bill will have a hard time making it at all. Rep. Dennis Iverson, R-Whitlash, said he signed the bill because he "supports the intent of the bill. I wish there were some way to insure the public good," he said.

"Too often we've deprived the public of energy . . . or people of jobs for no good reason whatsoever," Iverson said.

Despite his agreement with the intent of the bill, Iverson said it is too broadly worded to deal with the problems caused by delays effectively.

"It's probably impossible and certainly impractical to try to define interference," he said. "Where do you draw the line between a person's rights and the public good?"

Rep. Chris Stobie, R-Thompson Falls, agreed that the bill does not have a very good chance of passing, but said that it may serve to warn those who try to delay development.

"A lot of people are tired of seeing development held up for no good reason," Stobie said.

Environmentalists do not appear to be overly concerned about the bill. Steve Doherty, a lobbyist for the Northern Plains Resource Council, said the bill appears to conflict with constitutional rights and added, "we've never done anything without good cause."

Man dies after collapse

A 23-year-old man, Randy Wahl, died yesterday after collapsing after a basketball game in the UM recreation annex.

Missoula Deputy Sheriff Tom Woods said Wahl, who was not a UM student, was playing ball with some friends and became exhausted. He left the game, collapsed a few moments later, and was pronounced dead at St. Patrick Hospital at 4:05 p.m., Woods said.

The cause of death is unknown.

Blaylock cries discrimination

HELENA—Four women members of the Senate were charged yesterday with sex discrimination.

Sen. Chet Blaylock, D-Laurel, accused the Senate's only women members with violating Article II, section 4 of the state constitution. That article makes it illegal to discriminate against anyone on the basis of sex.

Blaylock charged the four, Sens. Pat Regan, D-Billings, Judy Jacobson, D-Butte, Dorothy Eck, D-Bozeman, and Jan Johnson, R-Missoula, had gone to lunch together "by themselves and without a male senator present."

The act, he said, represented "clear and willful discrimination."

The Senate's Majority leader, Stan Stephens, R-Havre, said he would not take action against the four other than a severe reprimand.

Responding to the charge, Regan told the senators that she would not complain if four of them went to lunch unaccompanied by a woman. And she added, "Those of us who have rocked the cradle want you to know that we're now going to rock the ship of state."

Abortion: a matter of choice

In 1973, the U.S. Supreme Court legalized abortion.

In all but one Montana legislative session since then, attempts have been made to alter that decision.

Somehow, the anti-abortion forces never seem to give up the hope (or the fight that goes with it) that they can convert others to their view — a view that, while compassionate, is not appropriate for everyone.

This session promises to follow the trend, as anti-abortion groups will gather at the Capitol Tuesday and Wednesday for rally/prayer sessions. At the same time — eight years from the date of the Supreme Court decision — a resolution calling for a national constitutional convention to propose an amendment banning most abortions will be introduced.

The whole process promises to be a replay of the similar past attempts.

The hundreds of people who will migrate to Helena to speak on either side of the issue have had their minds made up for years. They have testified in Helena for years. They cannot be swayed in their opinions, and seldom can the legislature with whom they plead.

But still they persist.

It is an exercise in perseverance, in faith and — most of all — in futility.

Perhaps the prospect of actually winning the battle "this next time" keeps abortion opponents fighting. But their reasoning is marred in one very important respect.

Their "Human Life Amendment" would, in their reasoning, protect the life of an unborn child by protecting his right to be born.

And while the rights of all humans should be protected, those rights include more than the simple one of being born; the right to be loved, the right to be cared for, the right to be wanted must all be considered.

If a child is going to be born to a woman who neither wants it nor has the money or the desire to take care of it, that child should not be born.

The fates of most unwanted babies are not pleasant. They become the children who are beaten by their parents, who are neglected by their parents, who are abandoned by their parents.

While both sides in the abortion battle have valid views and opinions, the fact remains that abortion is a purely personal choice.

That choice should not be sacrificed to the dictates of people who will not have to live with the results.

Tribute to a civil disobedient

Editor: "Let this speak for all in prison for conscience, all who endure trials, judges, guards, hunger fasts, all who submit before pain, rather than inflict it."

—Father Daniel Berrigan

"Imagine all the people living life in peace."

—John Ono Lennon

Karl Zanzig is the latest link in a long chain of Missoula pacifists who have been jailed for their conscientious objection to the escalating arsenal of nuclear weapons.

Karl turned himself in to Missoula County Jail in early December to serve the six month sentence a Seattle judge imposed for his civil disobedience at Trident Naval Base in Bangor, Wash. In early January, he was transported in handcuffs by federal marshals to a federal prison in California called Terminal Island (appropriately enough). Karl sits there 24 hours a day in a small two-man cell in maximum security while waiting to be transported to a federal work prison.

Karl and 112 other pacifists trespassed across the fence at the Trident base to make a nonviolent witness for peace. They had concluded it was a war crime for the United States to construct and deploy a fleet of Trident nuclear submarines, each of which is capable of annihilating more than 400 cities and vaporizing every man, woman and child living in them to radioactive ash. The designers of this weapon of mass murder will never spend a day in jail.

When fully deployed, every Trident submarine will carry more than 400 Mark 12A warheads; the pinpoint accuracy and explosive power of these warheads makes them the pre-eminent first-strike warhead today, capable of destroying enemy missiles in their silos and initiating nuclear war.

The protesters were tried and convicted by a U.S. federal judge who muzzled the truth about Trident by repressing the testimony of John Fried, special legal counsel to the U.S. judge at the WWII Nuremberg war-crime trials, has testified that the Trident submarine violates the United Nations Resolution of 1961 which condemns nuclear weapons as a "crime against humanity," and violates the Hague and Geneva conventions, which forbid the indiscriminate destruction of civilians.

Karl refused to see a probation officer for a presentence investigation, but told the judge that since the probation officer worked for a system based on war crimes, he would be glad to counsel the probation officer once a week and try to rehabilitate him from his criminal past! The judge reacted to this blunt statement of naked truth with one of the few maximum sentences handed down at the Trident trials.

Karl felt that if he didn't actively oppose the explosive furies of megatonnage and megadeath waiting to erupt from Trident submarines, he would be just as guilty as the "good Germans" who looked the other way while Jews and dissidents were hauled off to Nazi concentration camps.

Karl simply couldn't get this devastating reality of nuclear megadeath out of his mind and eyes: "Doctor my eyes have seen the years through a slow parade of tears."

When people asked him how he could bear to sacrifice his freedom in jail, Karl told them that he could never feel free in a world where political leaders were cold-bloodedly plotting "limited" nuclear wars, and that he could never accept the illusion of a bloodstained "defense department" which threatens to "defend" us by unleashing a global bloodbath.

Above all, Karl was unable to take hope in the illusion of "nuclear-free" Missoula. He knew only too well that if Malmstrom AFB in Great Falls is targeted, Missoula's nuclear-free zone will have its particulate smog replaced by clouds of radioactivity. Karl predicted accurately that the nuclear transport ban would be watered down by amendments and challenged in court so that radioactive truckloads could still pass through "nuclear-free" Missoula.

Initiative 84 was small comfort to Karl, because he knew that the nuclear escalation of the U.S. military would ensure more uranium mining, more reactors converting uranium to plutonium and more hydrogen bombs. There is no "nuclear-free" oasis on the face of the earth.

These stark realizations led Karl to be arrested several times — at the Trident naval base, at Rocky Flats, Colo., where all America's plutonium triggers are manufactured, and at Malmstrom AFB where 200 Minuteman missiles are poised to repeat the Hiroshima holocaust.

I visited Karl in Missoula County Jail several times in December and January and he told me he would emerge with a deeper commitment to nonviolent resistance than ever and will be prepared for greater sacrifices. He was deeply impressed by the civil disobedience at a General Electric plant where Mark 12A nuclear nosecones were smashed with hammers by a group of peacemakers which included a Roman Catholic priest and nun, a lawyer with three children, a college professor, a seminary student, Daniel and Philip Berrigan and Molly Rush, director of Pittsburgh's Thomas Merton Center and mother of five children.

They are in jail now, and so is Karl — part of our conscience is imprisoned with them.

They are not alone. Last Easter 23 Missoula citizens trespassed at Malmstrom AFB and several will trespass again this Easter. British historian E. P. Thompson said that on Oct. 26, 1980, 80,000 people demonstrated in London against the Trident missile system and the cruise missiles which Britain is buying from America. Thompson said that if political protest fails, civil disobedience against nuclear missiles will become widespread:

"Thousands and thousands will lie down in front of them and go to prison rather than let them come. They can't cope with that. These missiles are actually very vulnerable to massive popular protest because you know where they are, you can block the roads around them, you can cut the wire and try to get in, you can demonstrate again and again."

People will be arrested again and again, because nothing less than our survival is "blowing in the wind." For all pacifists in all jails, for Andrei Sakharov in exile in Russia, for Karl Zanzig and Molly Rush imprisoned in America, this anti-war anthem by the Hello People is tribute:

"From official sources, directives have come. Send out the marshals, round up everyone who's worshipping God instead of the State, who's preaching that love is better than hate. So I'm going to prison for what I believe, I'm going to prison so I can be free."

Where's Teddy?

Editor: In comment on Scott Hagel's opinion, I am amazed that anyone could support Carter's stand on the hostage negotiations. Personally, my fingers are crossed in hope that Carter won't finalize a deal with Iran so that Reagan will get the chance.

We have embassies in nearly every nation in the world. How safe will any of them be if other countries see that we will pay ransom to get our embassy staffs home. The very act of negotiation with a terrorist can only encourage more terrorism.

I personally believe that we should give Iran what is theirs, minus our expenses in this hostage situation. These negotiations have cost us taxpayers millions of dollars. Not only do many U.S. corporations and taxpayers have claims against Iran, so will the hostages if they ever make it out alive.

We need the "Big Stick" policy in Iran. Where is Teddy Roosevelt when we need him?

Bookstore sells protective key cases

By GREG GADBERRY
Montana Kaimin Reporter

In 1835, a person who needed a little protection against the wilds of the Rockies would probably pick up a .50 Hawkin gun from a local gunsmith.

In 1981, a student who needs a little protection against the wilds of downtown Missoula can pick up a three-inch spray can from the Associated Student's Store.

Since early this month, the bookstore has been marketing a "Halt Gas Key Case," which contains a small aerosol can that shoots a spray of tear-gas-like liquid. The cases cost $8.75.

Besides being inexpensive, the spray weapons are apparently both powerful and legal.

According to Penny Lentfer, who is selling the spray canisters on consignment in the bookstore, the weapons could provide students with a cheap means of self-defense.

"We decided to sell these here because of all the rapes and assaults in town," she said. "I hope that people who have one of these may feel more at ease."

Lentfer said the sprays are designed to temporarily disable an attacker. And according to Forrest Thomas and Richard Juday, both University of Montana chemistry professors, the spray could easily do so.

They said that while the active ingredient in the spray is different from that of tear gas, the two compounds both work by irritating mucus membranes and causing pain to eyes, nose, skin and lungs. In fact, Thomas and Juday said that the ingredient in the spray could prove more effective than tear gas.

The label on the "Halt Gas" says, however, that the product is not a form of Mace (a powerful liquid spray used in riot control).

Regardless of its strength, there are apparently no laws in Montana governing the use or ownership of the spray.

According to Bob Salomski, Missoula County deputy attorney, neither the state nor the county regulates the use of the spray.

Ron Brunell, director of UM Residence Halls, says that there are also no regulations covering its use at the university.

But even though it is cheap, legal and strong, "Halt Gas" has not been a very big seller here.

Bryan Thornton, general manager of the bookstore, said that so far only two of the gas canisters have been sold.

"If sales don't pick up, we may decide to withdraw the cans from our shelves by the end of the month," he said.

Montana snowpack down

HELENA (AP)—To no one's surprise, the snowpack in Montana mountains is very low for this time of year.

A survey by the Soil Conservation Service shows a very low pack at low elevations, but near normal pack at higher elevations.

The survey forecasts water supplies from April through September will be normal in the Kootenai and Milk Rivers. The Flathead River is forecast to carry 90 percent of normal flow, while the Clark Fork, Yellowstone and some of the Missouri headwater rivers are expected to carry 80 percent of the normal flow.

The survey shows the Beaverhead and Gallatin Rivers have low snow packs and are forecast to carry 65 percent normal runoff. The Sun, Marias, Teton and Musselshell Rivers are forecast to carry 70 percent of normal.

Stream flow during December was average over most of the state, but the survey shows above average flow in the Flathead and Kootenai drainages due to melting snow and heavy rains.

A conservative is the man who is too cowardly to fight and too fat to run.

Do you have quiz-fever?

By STEVE GRAYSON
Montana Kaimin Reporter

If economics midterms and chemistry finals are not enough for you, you can always go home and take tests such as "Are you living with a compulsive gambler?", "Are you an easy victim?" or "Would you make a good prosecuting attorney?"

According to Barbara Theroux, trade book buyer for the University Center Bookstore, the latest fad in mass-market books is self-rating test manuals. The test books, which promise to "tell you who you really are," range from simple eye charts to lengthy personality profiles.

The trend started when popular women's magazines, such as Glamour, Self and Cosmopolitan, began featuring self-rating tests, Theroux said. A few of the magazines are published by book companies, she said, and after getting favorable responses from reader surveys, the companies began publishing collections of self-rating tests.

"They're mainly conversation items really," Theroux said. "You invite a few friends over, take the tests and laugh about it."

One of the first self-rating test books was published in 1969. Dr. Max Lüscher claimed that a person could discover personality traits by which colors they chose in various tests.

Only recently has the market begun to swell with self-appraisal test books. Monarch Press has an entire line of testing books, including IQ and color preference quizzes. Theroux said sales of the books have "started to take off" and predicts that more test books will hit the market this spring.

Why anyone would leave school, go home and take more tests is unclear. It may be the freedom of taking an ungraded test. Most self-rating tests have uncritical evaluations regardless of the score.

The possible harm in such tests is debatable. One student said he disliked them and that "people use them to tell themselves they're normal." Another student said she simply enjoyed reading the different evaluations.

The king of self-rating tests has been the National Enquirer, which features weekly tests entitled "What your _____ reveals about your personality." The blank is filled in with anything from body parts to personal habits.

If you are tired of fighting exam-crazy professors, you can always go home and settle down with "Will your daughter marry someone you like?", "The dog owner's aptitude test" or "Are you really 'in touch'?"

Pot 'dangers' discussed

Ahhhhhhh, the pleasures of Cannabis.

Both speakers at a health forum in St. Patrick Hospital agreed that marijuana smoking is pleasurable, but warned against its use.

Dr. Paul Loehnen, a specialist in the treatment of the lungs, told the audience of about 60, that the most serious problem caused by pot-smoking is impairment of the learning process in students.

Loehnen said he becomes "very disconcerted" when he hears of the "great numbers" of high school children are "going to school stoned."

"It (pot smoking) could become a major catastrophe for this planet," he warned.

Susan Rangitsch, from the Life Development Center, traced pot's 4,718-year recorded history from its roots in China.

Her warning was that the "use of marijuana and its effects are extremely individual."

Loehnen emphasized, however, the need for additional studies on the effects of pot before society should decide to legalize it.

The nature of pot is highly controversial, he said, which makes for inadequate findings.

"Everybody studying it has a bias," he said.

And it should take at least twenty more years to determine whether pot is good or bad, he added.

An old Camel Cigarette ad was flashed on the slide screen. It said, "More Doctors smoke Camels." Loehnen said the lesson learned from this type of ignorance should be heeded.

The brain secretes thought as the stomach secretes gastric juice, the liver bile and the kidneys urine.

of the psychology department; Robert Lindsay, professor of history and chairman of the history department; Lynda Miller, assistant professor communications sciences and disorders; and George Woodbury, professor of chemistry.

• Non-academic staff — Guy Rittel, a custodian. Rittel is also considered as one of the five students.

• UM administration — Patricia Douglas, vice president for fiscal affairs; and Paul Blomgren, dean of the School of Business (representing the Council of Deans).

• Regents — Jeff Morrison of Helena, John Peterson of Butte and Shelley Hopkins, the student regent and a UM law student. Hopkins is also one of the "dual-role" members.

• Community members — Janet Cox, president of Exclamation Point Advertising in Billings and president-elect of the UM Alumni Association; Ty Robinson, a Missoula attorney; Katy Delano of Helena, a former president of the UM Alumni Association; and William Steinbrenner, a Missoula businessman.

These names will now go before the Board of Regents for final approval.

Richardson's release of the names of the 15 finalists culminates two weeks of parleying with Curtis over student representation on the search committee.

Weather or Not

The next thing Chris was aware of was awakening in a strange room. Even though he knew it was a cliché, he asked, "Where am I?"

"In a hotel room," answered his female savior. "You slipped as you were running away last night and knocked yourself out. I brought you here."

"I spent the night here — with you? Penny'll kill me." He brooded a moment. "Ouch!" he cried.

"What's the matter?" she asked. "A thought just struck me. I have to go to the police."

"I wouldn't suggest it." She handed him a newspaper. CHRISTOPHER MANSFIELD SOUGHT FOR MURDER, the headline screamed. Beneath it, a smaller caption read: Low clouds and patchy fog or light snow through tomorrow, with a high of 30 and a low tonight of 22.

At the crux of their dispute is an article of the UTU collective bargaining agreement, entitled "student participation."

This article states that students shall have at least 30-percent representation on all faculty and/or administration committees, and that the ASUM president shall appoint the student members on these committees. It also states that presidential search committees are not exempt from the 30-percent representation rule.

Earlier this week, Curtis had ensured that five of the 18 committee members would be — in part, at least — students.

As originally approved by the Board of Regents on Dec. 8, only two students would have served on a 17-member committee.

Although 30 percent of 18 is 5.4, Curtis said he "wasn't going to quibble over fractions."

Then, on Monday, Curtis told Richardson that he, as ASUM president, should choose all five student committee members. Curtis again cited the UTU agreement as the basis for his demand.

According to Curtis, Richardson told him the next day that Curtis' contention did not apply because the search committee was a "Board of Regents committee" rather than a "faculty and/or administration committee."

Earlier yesterday, Curtis had said: "I'm grudgingly yielding on that point." Four hours later, he withdrew his nine nominations.

"I don't think he's treating the students as well as he should," Curtis said earlier of Richardson. "I think we're being a little bit slighted."

Richardson was not available for further comment.

Curtis is also contending that one of the dual-role committee members does not qualify as a student: Rittel, the non-academic staff representative. Curtis said although Rittel has been a full-time student "off-and-on" in the past, he is not enrolled this quarter.

Rittel confirmed that he is not enrolled as a student this quarter, but that he took a 14-credit load Fall Quarter, and plans to return to school in the spring.

Ban on literature fought at Marquette

College Press Service

MILWAUKEE — Angry students have asked Marquette University administrators to drop their ban on campus distribution of birth control literature that does not conform to Catholic doctrines.

Marquette's student government not only asked that the birth control information be distributed, but that a new policy governing the handing out of any information not in accordance with Jesuit teachings be formed.

In response, the administration has set up a policy committee, composed mostly of students, to "advise" the administration on censorship matters. But Franklin Simpson, the school's student activities director, says, "The answer is more than likely 'no' when it comes to the issue of abortion and contraception literature."

Marquette, he explains, "stands upon the ideas of Catholicism, and would never undermine them."

The issue first arose in October, when Amy Keyser of Marquette Students for Life told Simpson that another student group, the Progressive Student Organization (PSO) was handing out birth control information on the campus.

Keyser reportedly worried that the literature "implied that the university condoned such practices as abortion," she told the Tribune, the student newspaper.

At that time Simpson told PSO President Richard Berg to stop circulation of the pamphlets, noting that "materials which describe, discuss, advertise, promote or advocate either abortion or methods of contraception not sanctioned by the Catholic Church may not be distributed . . . on the Marquette campus."

School policy also dictates that people or positions antagonistic to church doctrines "are to be avoided."

A look at the 47th Montana Legislature

montana review

The 1981 session of the Montana Legislature has been the focus of both worry and hope, as well as a lot of preparation, by many people at the University of Montana.

The session got underway Jan. 5, and predictions thus far look bright for UM and the Montana University System.

The Montana Kaimin's legislative reporters, Cathy Kradolfer and Boomer Slothower, have put together this Montana Review on the Legislature, its effects on UM and UM's effects on the legislative process. Inside are stories on ASUM lobbyists Steve Carey and Mike Dahlem, university-district legislators Bill Norman and Dan Kemmis, and on the subcommittee that basically determines the university system's and UM's budgets.

University funding: an optimistic outlook so far

By CATHY KRADOLFER
Montana Kaimin Legislative Reporter

"The Year of the University."

From lobbyists, senators and representatives, Democrats and Republicans, the prediction is the same—the university system will come out of the 1981 legislative session with a larger portion of the state's general fund than it has received in recent years.

Those who are optimistic point to several good signs:

- Both the Legislature's fiscal analyst and the Board of Regents are within $1.9 million in their recommendations for the six schools of the university system.

- A new funding formula, which would increase by $8,000 apiece the salary for faculty at the University of Montana and attempt to raise funding to the level of other schools in the Western region, is being used to determine the university system budget. The formula is the result of 18 months of work by an interim legislative committee.

- The Joint Appropriations Subcommittee on Education, which puts together a budget recommendation for the university system, has four new members and is perceived as a "pro-education" committee.

But despite the optimistic signs, this is also the year of tax-cut proposals.

And when the Republican majority is proposing a $107 million tax cut and, at the same time, saying it is in favor of more money for higher education, other areas such as social services are likely targets for cuts.

The Legislature's fiscal analyst, for example, has proposed cutting $20 million from the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services. Education is the only area in the fiscal analyst's budget analysis where more money was added to the governor's recommendation.

Higher education officials, too, say that despite the good signs they are worried about being too hopeful until the final budgeting process is over.

Noble said he expects faculty salaries at the four colleges to be a point of debate in hearings before the subcommittee. The fiscal analyst did not recommend the same raises the regents did for the colleges.

"I don't expect any problems with the subcommittee but I don't know what will happen from there," Noble said.

The various appropriations subcommittees will bring their budget recommendations to the House Appropriations Committee. And that, according to the commissioner's staff and some legislators on the education subcommittee, is where the university system's total request for $156 million from the general fund will face its toughest test.

"The subcommittee will come in with their figures; the tax cut proposal will come in. And when they total up the two . . . that's when there could be real problems, Noble explained.

The chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Rep. Art Lund, R-Scobey, has told the subcommittees to listen to all the testimony and, keeping the need for tax relief in mind, come up with what they think is an adequate sum for the various state agencies and institutions.

Lund said he hopes that by allowing the subcommittees to work out the budgets, the recommendations will come to the full committee "without too many bugs."

"We don't want to get in the position of re-hearing the testimony and sending the budgets back to the committees for cuts," he said.

How the subcommittee, the Appropriations Committee and the Legislature will act on university funding will be decided beginning Feb. 10—the tentative date for the subcommittee to begin hearings on the budget.

Budget recommendations

Following are the recommendations of the Legislature's fiscal analyst, the Board of Regents and Gov. Ted Schwinden for the Montana University System, including the University of Montana.

The Schwinden budget excludes about $15 million to $20 million in salaries for clerical and other non-teaching staff. Those salaries are still being negotiated and are usually appropriated in a separate bill.

General fund amounts are those which come from the state revenues. The total fund amount includes money from grants, interest and endowments which the Legislature must authorize the schools to spend.

New members bring change of ideas,

By CATHY KRADOLFER
Montana Kaimin Legislative Reporter

Sometime near the end of February, a six-member committee will hand its budget for the six schools in the university system to the chairman of the House Appropriations Committee. That budget, the result of countless early morning and late-evening hearings and hours of testimony from university students, presidents and faculty, will be a strong recommendation of what the House committee and the Legislature should give the schools to live with for the next two years.

Of the six members of the Joint Appropriations Subcommittee on Education, all but two are new to the process of pouring through pages and pages of numbers and three different budget documents. The two veterans, Rep. Esther Bengtson, D-Shepherd, and Sen. Harold Nelson, R-Cut Bank, served on the subcommittee during the 1979 session.

The newness of the committee is considered by many in the higher education lobby to be an asset rather than a liability.

"It's a committee that doesn't remember the antagonisms and fighting of past sessions," ASUM lobbyist Steve Carey said.

The committee chairman, Rep. Gene Donaldson, D-Helena, is also pleased with the makeup of the committee and says that because the committee members, including himself, are working on the subcommittee for the first time, the university system "is essentially starting with a clean slate."

"It's good to get new blood into committees," Donaldson said. "And this one is no exception."

During 1977, the subcommittee decided to use a 19:1 student-faculty ratio in determining appropriations to the University of Montana. As a result, UM cut 60 teaching positions. That session, and the 1979 session, built up distrust and suspicion by both the ding.

The subcommittee members and Commissioner John Richardson both had their first encounter with the budget process when the university system asked for a $6.8 million supplemental appropriation to pay for high utility bills and unexpected enrollment increases. After several days of hearings, the committee approved $5.5 million of the request.

"Our first encounter with the new commissioner was a good one," Bengtson said. "I expect the trend to continue."

Bengtson said the biggest question facing the subcommittee as it begins hearings on the university system budget and the budget requests of various other school programs, is how much money will be available for education, given the Republican's proposed $107 million tax-cut plan.

"We want to do our best for education, but we just don't know how much will be available," she said.

Donaldson classifies the committee as "pro-education." He has served on several school boards and lobbied for education associations at the Legislature, as well as serving on the interim Legislative Finance Committee, which devised a new method for funding the university system.

Donaldson said the background in university funding and affairs he received by serving on the interim committee was "invaluable." And he is a supporter of the new formula — one which tries to bring Montana schools in line with other schools in the region in terms of faculty salaries and total appropriations.

"It is certainly worth trying for two years," Donaldson said.

But simply because a new formula has been agreed on and because the regents and the fiscal analyst's budgets are close does not mean the committee will agree with every request, he said.

He said he wants to run a "tight ship" — allowing the subcommittee time to hear testimony and legislators and the university representatives.

"It got to the point where neither side felt they could trust the other," the former chairman of the committee, Carroll South, said recently. "I know I was never sure whether the commissioner was telling us the straight story."

But South, and three other members of the committee are gone, as is the commissioner of higher education at that time, Larry Pettit. And so is the solely enrollment-driven method of fun-making sure "they understand the implications of their actions."

Besides Donaldson, new members of the subcommittee are:

- Sen. Jack Haffey, D-

Anaconda. Haffey, who was recently appointed to the interim finance committee, is serving his first term in the Legislature. He works as an accountant for the Montana Power Co.

- Sen. Judy Jacobson, D-Butte. Jacobson's husband is a professor at the Montana College of Mineral Science and Technology. She says she has "close ties" with the nurse's association in Butte.

- Rep. Bob Thoft, R-Stevensville, is serving his second term in the House. He owns a ranch.

Passing legislation takes time

By CATHY KRADOLFER
Montana Kaimin Legislative Reporter

Getting a bill passed by the Legislature is a little more complex than simply introducing it and voting on it. A bill must go through a series of steps before it can be voted on, and the whole process is, in fact, designed to kill legislation.

The following is an example of how a bill is passed:

- A bill is introduced. It can be drafted by a legislator, a state agency, or a lobbyist but needs a legislator to sponsor it. In general bills can repeal, amend or add a law.

- The bill is referred to a committee by the speaker of the House or president of the Senate, where it is given a public hearing and receives a "do pass," "do pass as amended" or "do not pass" recommendation.

- Committee reports on the bill go to the floor of the House or Senate. If the committee accepts an adverse committee report, the bill is killed. If the committee report of "do pass" or "do pass as amended" is adopted, the bill is scheduled for debate before the entire House or Senate.

- The House or Senate debates the bill in open "Committee of the Whole," which is actually the entire body sitting as a committee. This is the second reading or debate state. The Committee of the Whole, after debate, recommends that the bill "do pass," "do pass as amended" or "do not pass."

- In formal session, the House or Senate votes on adopting or rejecting the Committee of the Whole report and the bill is scheduled for a final vote or "third reading."

- At the "third reading" stage a bill must receive a majority vote to be passed and sent to the other house, where the same process is repeated.

- If the bill passes both houses in exactly the same form, it goes to the governor. If it does not and is amended in the Senate, for example, it must then be returned to the House and go through the entire process (committee, Committee of the Whole, third reading).

- If the amendments are approved, the bill goes to the governor; if the amendments are rejected the bill goes to a conference committee made up of three senators and three representatives who try to reach a compromise and bring it to the floor of both houses.

- If the compromise is rejected in either or both houses, a new conference committee is appointed and the process starts again. The process can go on indefinitely — until the bill is killed or the session comes to an end.

- If the bill is approved by both houses, it isn't over the hurdles yet. The governor has the option of signing it, in which case it becomes law, or vetoing it, in which case it takes a two-thirds vote in each house to override it; or the governor can return it to the Legislature with suggested amendments.

While the second reading or "Committee of the Whole" report usually does not change on third reading, it can. In addition, the House or Senate can vote to reconsider an earlier action.

ASUM lobbyists push for funding

By BOOMER SLOTHOWER
Montana Kaimin Legislative Reporter

HELENA — They seem to be everywhere. One minute they are testifying before a committee, the next they are buttonholing a legislator to discuss a bill. While their effect can't be measured, ASUM lobbyists Steve Carey and Mike Dahlem are making their presence known at the 1981 Montana Legislature.

"Our priority is funding for higher education and the University of Montana in particular," Carey said in a recent interview. They intend to keep an eye on the process of university budgeting, which should begin in February, Carey said.

Both lobbyists agreed that this legislature appears to be much more supportive of higher education than past sessions.

"On the whole, the thing we've heard all around is that this is the university's year," Dahlem, who was an ASUM lobbyist in 1979 also, said. "I can't believe the difference between this education subcommittee and the last one. This one is very pro-education."

Carey, a senior in philosophy, was only slightly more cautious in his assessment. "We're pleased with the response from Republicans and Democrats alike," he said. "Let's say we're guardedly optimistic."

As lobbyists for the student body, they may work and even testify on issues other than university funding. What bills and what positions they should take is up to the ASUM Legislative Committee, Dahlem said. So far, they have not testified on any bills, he said, but have been working on a bill that would streamline the voter registration process.

They will probably testify against a bill proposed by Sen. Jan Johnson, R-Missoula, that would weaken Montana's air-quality standards, Dahlem said. The committee has approved their testifying, based on a survey of UM students taken earlier this year, he said.

Dahlem said they have to be careful of bills on which they testify. "You have to ask what is the student interest. If you can't show an interest either as a student or a citizen, your testimony is suspect," he said.

ASUM lobbyists at the last session testified on about 30 bills, Dahlem said, but he and Carey do not foresee working on as many this year.

Even so, the lobbyists' work on issues other than higher education funding has given rise to charges, most notably from some Board of Regents members, that their actions are contrary to the good of the university system. Dahlem in particular has been the focus of some criticism because he is registered as a lobbyist for both ASUM and the Citizens Legislative Coalition.

Dahlem admits that he may have some enemies at the Legislature, but argues that he also has many friends. "The people who hate me hate all the people I work with," he said. "They don't single me out, I just seem to be in more places."

To avoid antagonizing the legislators, Dahlem said both he and Carey are being very low-key. "We're very careful," he said. "We're showing that we're not flaming radical liberals."

Despite the criticism and the confusion about their proper role, Carey and Dahlem feel that their work is both necessary and proper.

"The regents don't seem to want to look at student lobbyists as an asset," Dahlem said. "I think we are. We're here (at the Capitol) every day."

Carey echoes those sentiments. "I feel that legislators do listen to students," he said. "We have a responsible position and we have information that they want."

Legislators Norman, Kemmis predict 'year of the university'

By CATHY KRADOLFER
Montana Kaimin Legislative Reporter

Sen. Bill Norman refers to himself and his Democratic colleague from the university district, Rep. Dan Kemmis, as "the Missoula minority coalition."

The two legislators are in the minority party in the Republican-dominated Legislature, but both have key leadership posts — posts they say will help them play a major role in helping higher education this session.

Kemmis, the House minority leader, and Norman, Senate minority whip, have served a combined total of 10 years in the Legislature.

Kemmis is serving his third term in the House, representing District 94—a district which includes a large portion of the university area. Like Norman, whose Senate District 47 includes roughly the same area, he feels responsible to the students and employees of the University of Montana.

"You can't live in Missoula and ignore the university system and you certainly can't live in the university district in Missoula and ignore the university system," Kemmis said.

Democrats in the Missoula delegation point to the fact that Kemmis was unopposed in the last election and Norman is serving his third term in the Senate, as examples of their success in representing their constituents.

And Rep. Harrison Fagg, R-Billings, the man credited with engineering the Republican takeover of the House this session, said Norman and Kemmis are "not the kind of people you want to spend time trying to defeat."

"They represent the people who elected them well," he said.

Both Kemmis and Norman have put in many hours to earn that reputation.

Norman is a member of the interim Legislative Finance Committee—a committee which, after 18 months of work, came up with a new funding formula for the university system that would give the system 38 percent more money, in the formula is approved by the Legislature.

Kemmis, too, has worked to lobby for university funding this session—traveling with UM's "road show" around the state earlier this fall to talk with legislators about the need for more money for UM, in particular for $8.6 million for a fine arts/radio-TV building.

And while their role in university funding is not as visible this session as in the past because of their leadership positions, both have the opportunity to work behind the scenes for the university system.

Norman lobbied hard to get freshman Sen. Jack Haffey, D-Anaconda, appointed to fill a vacancy on the interim Legislative Finance Committee. Haffey is also on the Joint Appropriations Subcommittee on Education and getting a legislator appointed who is on the subcommittee and also from the western part of the state was "a real coup," Norman said.

He is now trying to get "sympathetic" senators appointed to the Legislature's long-range building committee, the committee which will hear UM's request for the fine arts/radio-TV building.

The two Missoula legislators are optimistic the 1981 legislative session will be, in Norman's words, "the year of the university."

Kemmis said the attitude of legislators toward the university system is a positive one this session—something he says is the result of "a lot of hard work in the last two years by people involved with higher education at all levels."

"The university has been underfunded for many years," Kemmis explained. "And over the last several years the fact has been made so widely known that it's been accepted."

But, he said, "until the last gavel falls, you never know."

Although Kemmis and Norman feel obligated to support higher education, they are sponsoring legislation that the university administration does not always agree with.

One such issue is a bill both are jointly drafting to require state institutions to comply with city zoning laws.

UM has consistently maintained that because it is a state institution it does not have to follow city zoning laws. The administration has attempted in the last year to put university offices into property it owns in the Beckwith Avenue residential area around the university.

The Kemmis-Norman bill would make it illegal to do so.

UM President Richard Bowers says he is not happy about the bill, but added that he does not "expect to agree with Sen. Norman and Rep. Kemmis on each and every bill they support."

Kemmis, 35, is serving on the House Rules Committee and the Select Committee on Water this session. He said he did not request a lot of committee assignments to give himself time to carry out his duties as minority leader. Those include leading minority party floor debate, calling minority party caucuses and "just generally making sure the minority party runs smoothly," he said.

Norman, 58, serves on the Taxation, Public Health, and Labor and Rules committees.

Lady Griz begin league games

By CLARK FAIR
Montana Kaimin Sports Editor

From now on, every game for the Lady Grizzlies is a crucial one.

League play is under way, and all the pre-season scores and statistics become little more than indicators of how it might go the rest of the way.

Saturday, the Lady Griz, 11-3, host divisional opponent Eastern Washington in the Dahlberg Arena at 8 p.m. Last night, after press time, they hosted Washington State opening their league schedule.

If the pre-season is an indicator, it is a very positive one.

After 14 games, senior center Jill Greenfield leads the team in most of the individual categories. She is the team's top scorer and rebounder, and has the most points in a single game with 29.

Greenfield is shooting at a .483 clip, connecting on 84 of 174 from the field. From the free-throw line she is hitting 66 percent on 37 of 56 attempts. She has scored 205 points for an average of 14.6 a game, eighth best in the league.

She has pulled down 143 rebounds, almost 60 more than her nearest teammate, for an average of 10.2 a game.

Senior forward Sandy Selvig is leading the team in free-throw percentage, shooting an even 80 percent in 20 trips to the line. She also leads in blocked shots with 16.

The leading percentage field goal shooter among girls who have played in all 14 games is freshman center Doris Deden. She has hit on 43 of 83 from the floor for a 51.8 percent.

Freshman guard Cheri Bratt leads the Lady Griz in assists with 56 (sixth best in the league) and in steals with 39 (first in the league), but she also has the unenviable lead in personal fouls with 43.

The Lady Grizzlies have outshot their opponents from the floor, 42.5 to 33.9 percent, and from the line, 61.3 to 61.1 percent.

They have pulled down 85 more rebounds, passed for 72 more assists, blocked 20 more shots and stole the ball 27 more times. They have outscored the opposition 950-729.

Coach Robin Selvig's defense-oriented squad has forced opposing teams to turn over the ball 60 more times and to foul 17 more times. While scoring at a 67.9 point a game pace, they have allowed a league-leading 52.1 points.

Coach Selvig said his team is beginning to shoot the ball better than they had been over the last two weeks. He said the girls are now shooting 43 percent from the field, compared to an earlier 35 percent.

He said he feels his team is ready for the start of league play, and he is pleased to be opening up at home.

"These are extremely important games for us," he said, "and when you have the home advantage, you want to take advantage of it. To finish on top, we feel we have to win our games at home."

Selvig said he is looking forward to playing Eastern Washington, a team that beat the Lady Griz three times last year, including a loss in a playoff consolation game.

"We want that game bad," he said, "and our girls are going to be fired up."

Montana competes in the 10-team Northwest Women's Basketball League. The Lady Griz are in the Mountain Division, along with Montana State, Boise State, Washington State and Eastern Washington.

The other teams, with the exception of Alaska-Anchorage (an independent), are in the Coastal Division. The teams are Oregon, Oregon State, Portland State and Washington.

Selvig said that the strongest team in the league is the University of Oregon. He labeled them "the team to beat" and said they are one of the top 20 teams in the country.

He said Oregon State will also be "extremely strong."

Grizzly teams in action on the road and at home

The Montana Grizzlies basketball team takes its 2-0 conference record on the road this weekend when they travel to Ogden, Utah, to face Weber State tonight, and to Pocatello, Idaho, to play Idaho State on Saturday.

Tonight's game begins at 7:30 and Saturday's game gets under way 8 p.m. Both games will be broadcast by KYLT-AM radio.

While the basketball team is away, the UM gymnastics team will be hosting two meets, against Spokane Community College and Seattle University on Friday and the University of Washington on Saturday. Both meets will begin at 7 p.m. in the field house annex.

Also hosting some varsity sports action will be the UM wrestling team, which will meet Idaho State Friday in Dahlberg Arena at 7 p.m.

On Saturday in Great Falls, the UM women's track and field team opens its indoor season at the Bison Invitational. The meet is for high schools and colleges, and Montana State is expected to compete.
